

VALUED CUSTOMER

Thank you for disembarking at the Franschhoek Station Pub & Craft Bar at the historic Franschhoek Train Station. We trust that you will appreciate the historical significance of this century-old building that was designed by Sir Herbert Baker and built in 1915. Today the building is classified as a South African Cultural Heritage Building, which prevents us from making any alterations to the building structure. The original parcel office of the station now serves as our kitchen, with all the necessary conveniences of a modern kitchen, but without any structural changes to the original building.

With a growing number of patrons visiting our establishment, especially during season and over weekends, this adds significant pressure on our small kitchen.

We appreciate your understanding should your meal, on occasion, take a little longer than expected to get to your table. Your patience in this regard is much appreciated.

We trust that you will enjoy your experience at this historic venue on the railway tracks. May you come to remember your visit here with the same sense of nostalgia that pervades this beautiful old building.

STATION MANAGEMENT

HISTORY

In 1904 the railway line from Paarl to Franschhoek was opened. A simple corrugated iron structure served as the Station building. The opening of the Station had a huge positive impact on the local farming community which until then could only get their produce to the market by ox wagon or horse drawn carts. The farmers were also then able to order loads of manure which they used to plough into their orchards after collecting it from the station with ox wagons. In 1911 the first post arrived by rail, connecting Franschhoek with family and friends around the world.

The Station building as it stands today was designed by Sir Herbert Baker and was built in 1915. It is a protected building and no changes have been made to her elevations. For over thirty years there were two trains scheduled daily, but slowly as road transport became more popular, the passenger trains were discontinued. In 1976 the last steam engine puffed its goodbyes and was replaced with a diesel engine.

A few promotional steam trains did however visit, until the rail was finally discontinued toward the end of the last millennium. In November 2009 the much loved Station building was restored and The Franschhoek Station Pub & Grill was opened.
